SHORT COURSE AT UNIVERSITY

Farmers and Others Interested in Agriculture Attend. Prescott Man Makes Address.

Fayetteville, Ark., Aug. 16.—With an approximate registration of 600 farmers from all sections of the state of Arkansas, the first day of the fourth annual Farmers' Week short course to be held at the College of Agriculture of the University of Arkansas closed here tonight. Although the attendance was cut down somewhat by railroad conditions, it is expected that the total attendance will reach a figure almost as large as has been the case in previous short courses. A party of about 100 Oklahoma farmers is touring Northwest Arkansas today, and kept many farmers from that section from attending the course today, but both the northwest Arkansas farmers and the Oklahomans will be at the University tomorrow.

The two principal speakers on the first morning program were I. O. Schaub, field agent in extension methods of the states relation service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, and E. A. Miller of the Office of Extension Work of the federal department of Agriculture. Both are former co-workers of Dean Bradford Knapp of the University College of Agriculture. They urged closer cooperation between the farmers of the state and the College of Agriculture and its Extension departments, and presented the farm house as a unit in which every member should have an essential part as an "Agriculturalist."

Dean Knapp also delivered an address explaining the work of the University College of Agriculture and the Experiment Station, and showing the assembled farmers how they might better benefit from the work done by these departments.

Addresses of welcome were delivered in the morning by W. S. Campbell, president of the Fayetteville Chamber of Commerce. He literally gave to the visiting farmers the "keys to the city," and pointed out to them the importance of the College of Agriculture and of such institutions as Farmers' Week to the entire state.

The entire afternoon program was devoted to exhibits, demonstrations and lectures on a number of special subjects on different parts of the University campus. In a tent-auditorium devoted to agronomy, instruction in corn judging was given, and was followed by a variety study of corn from the standpoint of standards set by the Arkansas Seed Growers' Association, and a round table discussion of fertilizer practices and problems.

On the animal husbandry program, discussions by Prof. H. E. Dvorachek, and other members of the animal husbandry department of the faculty of the College of Agriculture on the value of live stock on the farm. These discussions were followed by illustrations of the value of pure bred sires, practical demonstrations being given with dairy and beef cattle, hogs and poultry.

The horticulture program was begun by an address by E. J. Watson, agricultural supervisor of the Prescott and Northwestern Ry., on "Needs of Southwestern Arkansas in Vegetable Production," and was followed by a pruning demonstration and an inspection of grape varieties on the small University fruit plot near the campus.

Programs in women's work and in boys' and girls' club work were also carried out.

FIRST BALE DECIDED

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 14.—The Little Rock cotton exchange today settled the controversy of receiving the first bale of 1922 cotton by awarding the distinction to Glover and Miller of England, Lonoke County. The other bale over which a controversy arose, was sent in by J. W. Gibson, of Sherrill, Jefferson County. It was announced after the vote that the bale would be auctioned off at the Cotton Exchange on Sept. 1. The first bale last year arrived on Aug. 23.

SUMMER SAVINGS

Even if we didn't know that there is no school just now, we have some pretty good evidence to that effect in our savings department.

The accounts of many boys and girls who are depositors here have already shown a fine increase through vacation earnings.

We are proud of the number of boys and girls of Prescott and vicinity who have savings accounts here. Have you one?
